Trinity Farm and El Rancho Grande Cemetery Burials

by Ed Millis

A Short History of Trinity Farm and El Rancho Grande Cemetery

The Trinity River is 715 miles long with a drop of 1280 feet, and is the longest self-contained river in Texas. It has four forks in the Dallas/Fort Worth area: East, West, Elm, and Clear. It was named by an early Spanish settler, Alonzo de Leon, on May 19, 1690, for the day of Feast of the Most Holy Trinity.¹ And of course, it was the "trinity" of the confluence of the West and Elm Forks with the Trinity River that attracted John Neely Bryan in 1841 to stake his claim for what was to become a rather successful settlement.

Soon, Captain John W. Record established a convenient place to cross the Trinity, naming it Record Crossing. The street, Record Crossing Road, still exists, although the Trinity's riverbed itself has been moved ½ mile west into the center of the flood plain.

This busy river crossing, which was carrying a flood of people heading West, attracted other activities as well. John Record, in partnership with Joseph W. Ellett, built a grist and saw mill on the banks on the Trinity at Record Crossing to supply flour and meal and to saw a few planks for the citizens of the nearby growing city. A county plat map of 1877 shows a tiny square labeled "M" on the west bank of the river at Record Crossing.

As an adjunct to the mill, and as a means of using the leftover "mast" from the milling operation, Ellett also had a "hog claim" in the woods in the bottoms between the Elm Fork and the West Fork. This "jungle," as it was described by a later descendant of Ellett's, was known as Bear Thicket, from the observation that it was full of bears, with wolves, panthers and wild cats, in addition to "no end of turkeys."²

By 1915, Dallas was a bustling city with a population approaching 125,000, and the people needed to eat something besides turkey. They, and lots more people within railroading distance, needed fruit and vegetables, and some cotton would be profitable, too. And so Trinity Farm was born. It was brought into being by three entrepreneurs, E. P. Harwell, an oil man from Tulsa, Oklahoma, C. H. Clark of Wichita Falls, and T. H. Harbin of Waxahachie. In addition to Trinity Farm, they were the owners and operators of several other large farms in the area.

They built Trinity Farm in a big way. They purchased thousands of acres, including the land owned by the Record Crossing Mill, and apparently taking in Bear Thicket. A search of Dallas County Tax Rolls showed that the Trinity Farm Company, and later the Trinity Farm & Securities Company, owned 5169 acres of land in 1922, 5435 acres in 1923, 5751 acres in 1930, and 5697 acres in 1935.³ This huge tract of land, approximately 8 ½ square miles, was for the most part between the Elm and the West Forks of the Trinity, extending westward in a triangle from the confluence. Record Crossing was about a mile north of this point on the Elm Fork and is included in the property, as was other acreage east of the Trinity. This acreage contained the El Rancho Grande cemetery. It is not clear how much of this vast expanse of fertile and flood-prone land was actually planted and farmed, but, from the reports of the people who remember it, it was substantial.

Closer to today, Mel Brewer, long-time Dallas Genealogical Society member and currently Director of Publicity, remembers riding his bicycle through Trinity Farm on his way to Irving in 1937. "Rows and rows of pecan and fruit trees. It went on a long way," he recollected.

I would head west out from the Oak Lawn area, and find my way to Record Crossing. Continuing west from Record Crossing, I would ride down the road along the river [the upper loop of the Elm Fork north of Record Crossing]. Squatters lived there and made willow furniture for a living. I would cross over the railroad tracks [Rock Island Line?] and ride due south through Trinity Farm. As I recall, it was mostly orchards and pecan trees. I think they grew pecans, peaches, and pears. All the trees were well-kept and in neat rows.

Then I would come to another road, now Irving Blvd, [Possibly the remnants of the original Birdville Trail] and turn west, alongside an old concrete bridge, like a viaduct, that was in use. It went over a fork of the Trinity, I think, or maybe some other watercourse. This took me into Irving, but I went through the little town of Kit, just a wide spot in the road, on the way. I also passed a cemetery [Kit Cemetery and/or Oak Grove Cemetery] on this road.

Operating this large farm required labor and lots of it. A glimpse of the farm in the 1930 Census reveals that there were 37 houses on the farm that were occupied and reported for the census.⁴ Of these, 33 were rented by the workers and their families, and the remaining 4 were owner-occupied. New-fangled radio? Two, in the 37 houses.

The ethnic breakdown of the families identified as living on Trinity Farm property in this census is 8 Black, 9 White, and 20 Hispanic. Total of all family members and "roomers" was 47 Black, 37 White, and 124 Hispanic, for a grand total of 208 people of all ages living in Trinity Farm. A substantial rural community indeed, and certainly needing a cemetery in the vicinity. The exact beginning of El Rancho Grande cemetery has not been determined. Although there is the record of a burial in 1913, it was found to be in error, and was actually the birth year. The oldest burial found with an identifiable marker is 1919. Death certificates of a few of the burials in El Rancho Grande list addresses of the deceased as other than Trinity Farm, so some undetermined number of workers also lived off-site.

Did the farm continue until 1945 as is stated in some of the histories? This question may be answered by others at a later date. The last burial in El Rancho Grande cemetery was Tiadora Zepeda Montalbo Chaves, on the 28th of July, 1954. But the cemetery has been brought back to life, so to speak, by a dedicated group of descendants of the original families of Trinity Farm. Dia de los Muertos, the Hispanic Day of the Dead celebration, in November 2003 brought a crowd of several hundred from as far away as California for an all-day “reunion” on the cemetery grounds. It has truly become a gathering place of the “family” of Trinity Farm.

During the celebration, I remarked to one of the handsomely-dressed men what a wonderful thing it was to have restored the cemetery. He replied that wasn't the best part—the best part was getting the families back together after all these years. How true . . .

Texas Historical Marker

State of Texas Historical Marker text:

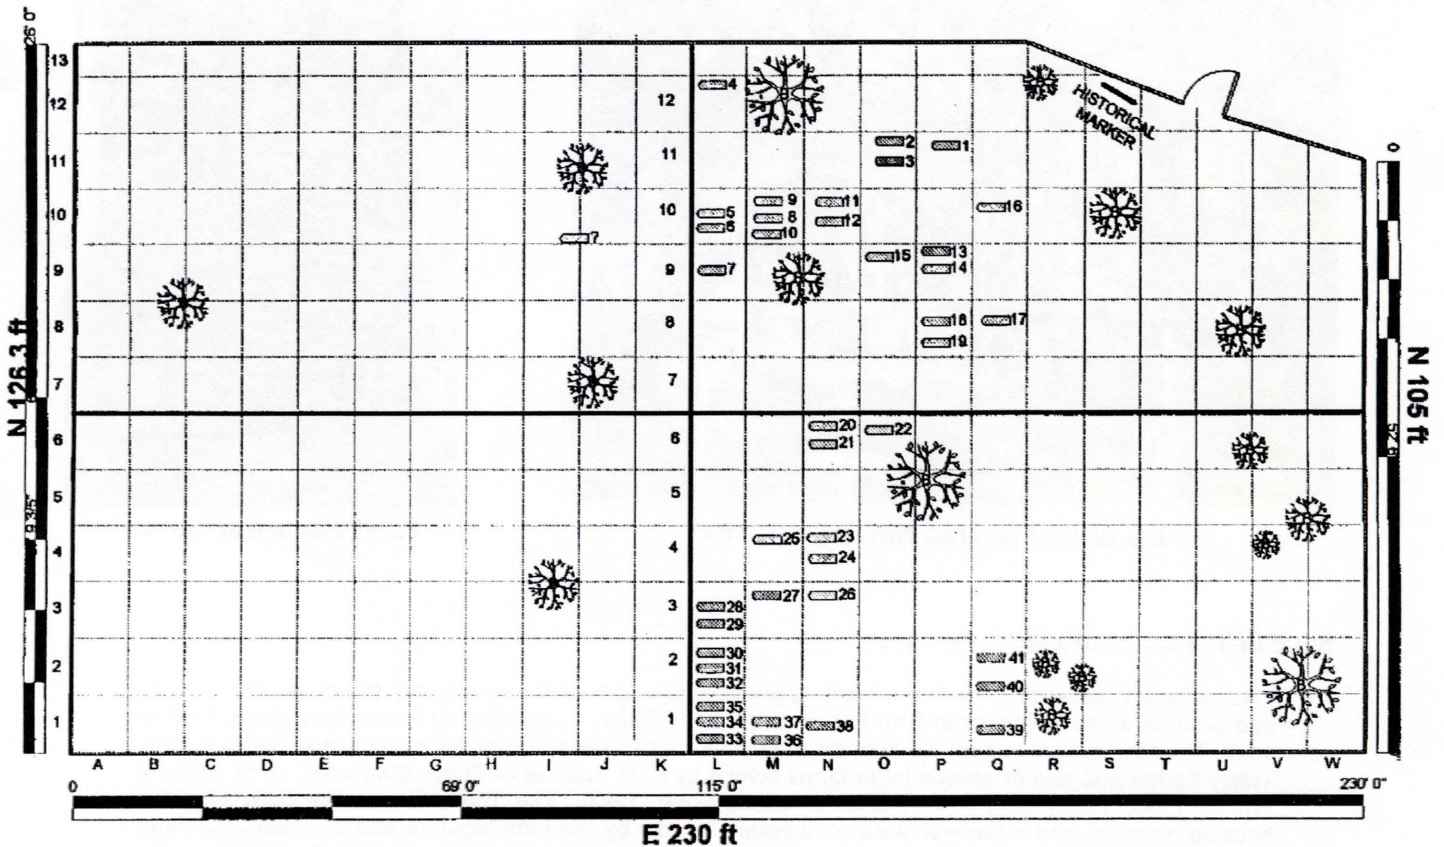

This cemetery represents the last remaining physical reminder of the community of people who worked and lived on a vast commercial farm here known as the Dallas County Trinity Farms from about 1915 to 1946. The farm covered about 3,000 acres of land which had been farmed for many years. Dallas County Trinity Farms was one of several large farms owned by E. P. Harwell of Tulsa, Oklahoma, C. H. Clark of Wichita Falls, Texas, and T. H. Harbin of Waxahachie, Texas. The Trinity Farms Company provided housing, schools, and a general store/commissary for use by the farm laborers and their families. Farm laborers consisted mostly of Mexican citizens, many of whom arrived during the Mexican Revolution, and a sizable number of African Americans. Harbin lived in a large white ranch house and operated the farm which was also known as Rancho Grande. The earliest recorded burials occurred in the early 1920s. The children of Hispanics and African Americans who worked on the farm attended separate schools. Similarly, the cemetery contains separate sections for Hispanics and African Americans. The last burial occurred in the early 1940s. The cemetery is maintained by descendants of the families interred here. Sesquicentennial of Texas Statehood 1845 – 1995

El Rancho Grande Cemetery

El Rancho Grande is well-hidden from casual eyes, and also from those actively seeking it. South of Record Crossing Road, past the end of the pavement of Lee Hall Drive, it resides quietly, almost in the shadow of the St. Paul Medical Center on Harry Hines. Well-mowed, it now sports the gazebo shown in the photo. Too few of the original headstones remain, and many new wooden crosses have been erected to honor the unmarked ancestors. As was done in the past, this is a segregated community—the Hispanic interments are in the east half, and the Black interments in the west. Only a few fragments of markers can be found on the west side, the exception being the granite marker for Fred Lewis, WWI veteran.

In 1997, Jay Sowell of Dallas Boy Scout Troop 712, chose to map and gather headstone information from El Rancho Grande for his Eagle Scout Project.⁵ He produced the professional layout shown here, along with the document Key to Burials in El Rancho Grande Cemetery. This work was invaluable in the search for the interments in El Rancho Grande, and is reproduced here with his kind permission.

El Rancho Grande Burials

The following tables of burials and death certificate information are generated from the five sources listed below. The information sources generally agreed, but sometimes not, so all information is presented as found with the sources noted. As a comment on the task of merging information from a number of sources, great care was taken to record the exact spelling of the names, which may vary considerably from source to source.

Information linking these burials to the 1930 census records, if any, is included at the end of the death certificate information. Extracts of the 1930 census information follow the burial lists, beginning on page 26.

The El Rancho Grande website's list of burials is the left-most column and is the source of the basic list of names. The column heading is abbreviated ERG web site. Additional columns may contain both Jay Sowell's survey (Hispanic section only) and the 1979, updated 1992, DGS survey. The right-most column contains the selected information taken from death certificates from one or both of two sources, if available.

Information sources are:

Items noted EM are personal observations by the author.

Right column notes:

If death certificate year and number are given, the information is from Texas State Vital Statistics.

If El Rancho Grande web site death certificate information also exists, the code WSDC is added after the Texas death certificate number.

Data from the WSDC that differs from Texas death certificate information is added, indented, and marked WSDC.

If there is no Texas death certificate available, information is from the El Rancho Grande web site death certificates, and WSDC is noted in the death certificate number position.

Information from the State of Texas death certificates has been entered in a form similar to the original document, as far as date format, order of names, and abbreviations.

Information in brackets [] does not appear in the original documents and is a comment by the author.

The residence of the deceased was listed as Trinity Farm unless otherwise noted.

Acknowledgements

The following people were invaluable in my search for the burials in El Rancho Grande cemetery. Without their support and encouragement, this project could not have been done. Thanks!

Angelita Hernandez, who started this investigation with her story in the DGS newsletter.

Frances James, "The Cemetery Lady," who graciously shared her knowledge and data with me.

Jay Sowell, Eagle Scout

Lee Suarez, long-time caretaker of El Rancho Grande cemetery

Ray Trinidad, who went way out of his way to open the cemetery for me

Shirley Sloat, for her unsparing help in editing and with citations

And, of course,

The staff of the 7th and 8th floors of the Dallas Public Library
